Reasons For Allowance

None of the references disclose alone or in combination disclose a method for maximizing light transmission through an optical switch which includes a first mirror to direct a beam of light to received from an input optical port to a second mirror that redirects the beam of light to an output port, the first and second mirrors each being pivotally actuated on first and second axes, the method comprising: simultaneously moving the mirrors through a sequence of coordinate positions about an origin and comparing the light intensity value read at each coordinate position with a previous light intensity value, if a particular coordinate position produces a light intensity value greater than the previous light value and then shifting the origin to the particular coordinate position.
